The classified columns of the newspapers are the directories of the modern business and domestic world. If a householder wishes a seamstress, or a glazer, or a carpet cleaner, or a dyer, or a job carpenter, or a manicurist, or a dress-maker, or a paper-hanger, or a decorator, or a pianotuner, or a second-hand dealer, or a scissor-grinder, or a chair caner, or a house painter, or a bird fancier, or an electrical worker, or a junk dealer, he or she will first refer to the classified pages of the newspapers. Think what it means to you to have a few lines stating your business in this directory which is referred to each day by tens of thousands of householders in Washington. Can you afford to remain out of this directory? The Times with its daily circulation of over 46,000 (net) offers an unusual opportunity.
